GOALS OF AN OPEN SOCIETY

"Open society is a higher form of organization requiring a higher level of education, legal and institutional safeguards, and a tradition of tolerance. It is more than just democracy in the popular meaning of the term. The meaning of democracy can be easily misconstrued. If it is taken simply as the rule of the majority it can lead to intimidation and even ethnic cleansing. The protection of minorities, the freedom of thought and expression are vital ingredients of an open society and so is the existence of a civil society which is not dominated by the State."

George Soros

Nationalist Dictatorship versus Open Society
Lecture delivered at the Harvard Club of New York
November 18, 1992

"I think that my foundation has been more successful in Bulgaria than in most other countries and I also believe that this success is a reflection not only of the small group of people who are actively engaged in the work of the foundation but of Bulgarian society at large. Bulgaria is going through a difficult transition and the descent of the Soviet Union into chaos greatly adds to the difficulties. But I am confident that Bulgaria will make the transition to an Open Society because it has the political will and the human resources which are necessary for success. I am proud to be able to contribute to the process."

George Soros

Underwriting Democracy
Preface to the Bulgarian edition
Sofia, 1992

Mr. George Soros addresses the annual meeting of the Soros Foundations in Central and Eastern Europe, hosted in Sandanski.

THE THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF THE OPEN SOCIETY FUND

April 5, 1993, marks the third anniversary of the Open Society Fund - Sofia. Our objectives are: to support the movement for establishing a democratic society in Bulgaria, to assist the economic reforms, and to promote a market-oriented economy, all of which bring our culture closer to the cultures of the other countries. The foundation's founder is Mr. George Soros, a well-known American financier and philanthropist, who is actively supporting the process of reforms in Central and Eastern Europe. Nevertheless, the foundation is a Bulgarian organization, guided in its work by a Board of Trustees and thirteen Expert Committees comprising more than fifty eminent Bulgarian intellectuals and public figures. In the beginning, we made tremendous efforts to take the country out of its airtight isolation, to help a large number of people to travel, and to make contacts with other organizations throughout the world. For the three years of the foundation's existence, more than two thousand specialists succeeded in establishing professional contacts under various programs. We are trying to be the center for providing selected information in the sphere of international cultural exchanges and education, as well as coordinating foreign institutions' programs in Bulgaria.

We have developed active programs in the areas of journalism, reform in state management and civil society, libraries, reform of Bulgarian universities, foreign language teaching, links with Bulgarian emigres abroad, etc.

In 1992, the foundation supported more than 1300 individual and group projects, the total grants amounting to 14 million levs and 2 million dollars. Apart from these sums, the foundation also invested a considerable amount of money in the creation of a publishing and distribution department.

To implement its programs in 1992, the foundation attracted financial resources from other organizations as well, amounting to eight million levs and four million dollars. More than 65% of the money raised came from foreign organizations.

Donations and charity from private individuals and organizations are not yet very popular in Bulgaria because the society is rather poor. It is true that the biggest donors throughout the world are private individuals. Over the past decades in this country, the state concentrated all property in its hands, and private citizens did not possess substantial personal resources. But as the level of affluence in Bulgaria increases, the number of donors and the amount of their gifts will also grow. For the time being, we are making efforts to involve various companies in solving social problems. The scholarships for students in economics constitute an extremely promising and significant example of this; our foundation made a challenge grant of sixteen scholarships, and very soon after 23 more followed from private companies.

Donations in the form of legacies will probably also increase in the future, this being very typical of prosperous societies. However, at present we rely mainly on the generosity of Mr. Soros, on support from the government and on the growing publishing and book distribution activities.

The new element in our work is that we are shifting our funding priorities away from the international sphere and are concentrating on serious support for the major projects within Bulgaria: in education, the reform of secondary schools and universities; the development of a civil society in the country; the formation of the National Library Information System; and in media, training programs and donation of modern equipment. The number of grants and scholarships available to students in Bulgaria will grow steadily. And since practically the entire Bulgarian youth passes through our educational system, we shall encourage the bright, energetic and talented young people to stay in the country, rather than to emigrate. The first scholarships that we provided to students of economics were an attempt at such support, and we shall try to expand it in the future.

Another major trend, which is directly connected with the philosophy of the Open Society Fund, can be seen in the Open Society Clubs in the country. The first requirement along the road to an open society is to abolish the disparity between the capital and the provinces. This requires an information network accessible to the public, which may be achieved through the foundation's active presence in the whole country. What is more important, everywhere there are people who are willing to offer their energy, intellect and financial resources in various activities and local initiatives in support of the democratic, economic, and other reforms. However, these patriotic Bulgarians often lack contacts among themselves, as well as information and links with organizations both within the country and abroad. Quite naturally, they sought us out, and together we have already established Open Society Clubs in six cities.

The Clubs are already working very well and we are supporting them with organizational, informational, and financial assistance, so that each can become a key player in the implementation of the democratic reforms where their influence is most tangible - in their own regions. In this context, it is also necessary to make extreme efforts to overcome political and ethnic confrontation, because they are totally alien to the values of the open society. If there is to be a dialogue and mutual understanding, the energy should be concentrated in constructive projects.

Money is never enough for so many projects. However, we are trying to make the most of our potential by channeling our resources to high-priority areas. This is actually our greatest difficulty, which prompted us to form Expert Committees for each of our programs (for the time being there are 13 such committees, but their number is expected to grow to 15). We attempted to attract the best professionals to work in these committees, because they understand well the issues in their respective fields and could make the best decisions on how the money under the various programs is to be allocated.

Through professionalism and transparency, we hope to be able to continue our efforts in supporting the creation of an open society in Bulgaria.

Program 16 Open Society Clubs

The network of Open Society Clubs in Bulgaria emerged in 1992 as a result of the efforts of the Open Society Fund to overcome the isolation of the country regions, to publicize the ideas of the Open Society and to find an appropriate way to promote local projects. The Open Society Clubs are free civic associations which act both as centers for intellectual contacts among people concerned about the development of their cities, and at the same time, as community foundations.
